| | San Francisco is in a housing affordability crisis. Wherever we can, we must prioritize our public resources and our public land for the expedited construction of housing for low- to middle-income workers and families, including educators, who are too frequently leaving San Francisco and our public school system. Prop E's comprehensive rezoning of public lands and large lots will make it easier and faster to build affordable housing and educator housing citywide, from the Bayview to the Richmond. Currently, there are hundreds of large, underused lots across the city where housing is not currently permitted. By unlocking that land, Proposition E will create opportunities for affordable housing projects citywide, without the need for lengthy rezoning processes. This will speed up affordable housing construction, save city resources, and get more affordable housing built as a result. This initiative also helps build affordable housing for SFUSD and CCSF teachers, faculty, and staff, who are struggling to stay in the city where they work. The City has talked about building educator housing for years: this initiative will help provide early childhood educators, para-educators, tenured teachers, and school social workers with new opportunities to make their home in San Francisco. By rezoning land owned by the school district and City College, each unit built on that land can be dedicated and affordable for their teachers and staff struggling to stay in San Francisco. The Affordable Homes for Educators & Families NOW initiative (Prop E) works together with the Affordable Housing Bond (Prop A), creating a unique opportunity to address the two biggest barriers to affordable housing: limited land and funding.
